As nine-tenths of the desirable antique silver that exists is of English manufacture, descriptions are confined to that alone, and as nearly all of this silver was made in London, entire attention has been devoted to London hallmarks. These are given in the most complete and accurate table yet published. Unique and simple in its general plan, it is possible by its use for anyone to determine the exact date of any piece with the London hallmarks.

The list of makers' marks is also the most elaborate ever compiled. The marks have been gathered from every available source, and are arranged alphabetically, so that reference and comparison can be made without referring to an index. This is perhaps the very best book on the subject written by an acknowledged authority.
